

"Interwoven Realities"

Interwoven Realities brings together the practices of Samar Hejazi, Khalid Al Banna, and Najat Makki, three artists whose works examine how identity, memory, and perception are continuously reimagined through material and form. Each artist, in their own language, blurs the boundary between what is seen and what is sensed, what is inherited and what is reinterpreted.

Samar Hejazi's work engages with the intangible, inviting viewers to reflect on how meaning is constructed and how perception shifts with light, shadow, and spatial interplay. Her layered, often suspended textile works are not only visual but experiential, drawing on craft traditions while confronting the limits of what we assume to be stable or knowable.

Khalid Al Banna's evolving collage practice examines the transformation of the UAE's social and cultural fabric. From his stark, introspective black-and-white paper collages to his vibrant sculptural textile works, Al Banna captures a society in flux. His use of traditional materials in contemporary configurations serves as both a tribute to and a critique of the shifting nature of cultural identity, creating visual records of collective memory shaped by globalization, urban development, and personal history.

Najat Makki, a pioneer of abstraction in the Gulf, contributes a deeply intuitive and philosophical approach to color, light, and form. Her work evokes the elemental—earth, sky, energy—and transforms the familiar Emirati landscape into realms of lyrical abstraction. With her early adoption of fluorescent pigment and scenographic lighting, Makki creates environments where painting extends beyond the canvas and becomes a phenomenological encounter. Her practice embodies both the legacy of modern Arab abstraction and a radical individualism that challenges the viewer's emotional and optical engagement.

Together, these artists offer distinct yet intersecting visions. They propose that reality is not fixed, but woven a fabric of moments, symbols, and materials that can be endlessly layered, unraveled, and reassembled. Interwoven Realities is a quiet disruption of linear narratives. It invites us into spaces where memory is pliable, tradition is transformed, and vision itself becomes a material to question, reshape, and imagine anew.
